MRS. ASA HOWARD

Mrs. Helen Howard, wife of Asa Howard, passed away this morning at her home at Northwest Bethel. Funeral services will be held at 2 p. m. Sunday.

SUSIE TURNER RUSSELL

Released from 23 weeks of weariness in bed, Mrs. F. E. Russell of Bethel passed away at one A. M., February 19. During this time she was faithfully cared for by Mrs. Edward Philbrick of Naples, a trained nurse and niece of Mr. Russell.

Mrs. Russell was Susie Luce Turner, the youngest of four children of Orrin S. and Rebecca Luce Turner and born in New Vineyard Sept. 2, 1869. She began teaching school at a youthful age in her home town, Anson and Rangeley, where she later taught music and was the regular church organist.

Mrs. Russell was a pianist and a singer. Music was a passion with Mrs. Russell throughout her life. She was ably instructed by Mrs. Fred McCleary, nee Hattie Hunter, and by the late Mrs. Marcella Dyer of Strong, and later became proficient as a pipe organist.

As a girl of 12 she began playing for the little church choir at home—first the melodeon, then reed organ.

In 1895 she married Francis E. Russell of Phillips, a graduate of Wilton Academy, F. S. N. S. and Colby College. For 40 years he was connected with schools as teacher and superintendent, living in various towns, where Mrs. Russell usually played the pipe organ in church. Sixteen years ago the family settled in Bethel. Here Mr. Russell was superintendent of schools for nine years, then retired. For the past 15 years Mrs. Russell has been organist in the Congregational Church of Bethel, of which she was a member, serving also as chorister; also as pianist in the orders of P. of H. Rebekahs and Eastern Star.

Besides the husband and one son, Richard, she leaves a half sister, Mrs. Frances Turner Voter of New Vineyard, several cousins and a wide circle of friends who have constantly remembered her with flowers, fruit, gifts and messages, calling daily during her long illness, and always greeted with a smile of welcome, evidence of her indomitable courage and resignation.

A beautiful service was held at the Congregational Church Friday afternoon, conducted by the pastor, Rev. H. T. Wallace, who spoke commendably of the whole-hearted and personal interest Mrs. Russell gave to the musical activities of the community. The floral tributes were many, from friends and acquaintances. The flowers were her husband's brothers, J. A. Russell and G. E. Russell, and nephew, F. T. Philbrick. The interment will be at New Vineyard in the Spring.

Mrs. Beattie E. Bartlett of Portland spent the week end in town.

BETHEL GRANGE

The Bethel Grange met on Thursday evening, Feb. 20. The steward, assistant steward, secretary and organist were absent. Their chairs were occupied respectively by Fred Clark, Hermon Mason, Minto Kimball and Louise Dailey. The lecturer's hour was omitted.

The charter was draped in memory of Sister Susie Russell. The secretary was instructed to extend an invitation to the members of the Round Mountain and West Bethel granges to meet with the members of the Bethel Grange at the meeting to be held on Thursday evening, March 5. Supper is to be served at 6.30, and the meeting is to begin at the usual hour which is 7.30.

The present method of electing town officers is as antiquated as the fire fighting equipment in many communities. It still serves its purpose satisfactorily but in a town like Bethel it is a disgrace.

FEW CONTESTS SLATED FOR BETHEL MEETING

With the fine record of the present officers of the town, and most of them standing for re-election, there seems little reason for change of officials or of lively contests next Monday. It is expected that the principal interest at the local town meeting will center on the questions of rural fire protection and the use of the secret ballot in municipal elections. The Citizen may be biased on the subjects mentioned, as we have carried both in the list of Bethel's needs for some time, but it appears that others are becoming aware of the advantages of more modern methods.

The town has incurred an expense of $572.40 during the past year in protecting West Bethel property from the spread of fire. Besides that the town will lose $100 or so in taxes from the property lost in two fires. Those who witnessed the West Bethel fires and demonstrations of modern equipment there will be in favor of definite action Monday, while it appears that some villagers feel that the village corporation's present 40-year-old apparatus is all we need. The debate may be interesting.

TOWN AFFAIRS IN GOOD CONDITION

Plensing Balances—Few Overdrafts—Budget Recommendations About Same

The annual reports of Bethel's town officials were distributed Saturday, and show very efficient municipal management. A casual summary of the year's business shows the comparison of overdrafts and unexpended balances more encouraging than last year. The tax rate was a quarter of a cent higher, the valuation was up some $23,000, and 23 more polls were taxed than in 1934. As usual, the road accounts tell practically nothing of where the money (over $12,000) was expended. Here are some of the figures:

CHAPTER I

THE house stood alone on a sand dune overlooking the sea, dark, deserted, and silent, except for the swirl of the rain blowing against its shingles. Wet to his skin, and shivering, the Duke struggled to pry open a window.

From his dank coat pocket, the Duke drew a cheap jackknife and a tiny searchlight.

The Duke's thumb pressed the button, and, momentarily, the ray revealed waving wet beach-grass, and a single scrub pine bent in the wind. Then, carefully, he began cutting away the dry putty that held a pane of glass. It was slow work. "Why don't I break the damned thing?" the Duke asked himself, and a minute later, felt the unshattered glass drop into his hand.

It was easy to open the window, then, and easy for a slim and agile man to climb through. Once inside the house, he paused. Would the electric lights be working, and would it be safe to turn them on? Why not? Half the summer residences in Southampton had been opened for the season. The Duke touched a switch; his searchlight had disclosed beside a door.

It was exactly the sort of room he had expected: a luxurious breakfast room in a luxurious summer residence. Most of the furniture was covered but a gay breakfast table stood in the center, and, behind it, was an open door to a pantry. The Duke walked through, and into the kitchen, turning on lights as he went. After all, why should they mind an extra week of good food?

He glanced at anyone who had seen that grin might have found it hard to mind. It was an ingratiating grin in a pleasant, likeable face. A lean face, weather-beaten and a little lined, but with large, kind, gray eyes, surrounded by a fringe of curly black hair. The Duke's thin frame stretched a little six feet above the worn edges of the white table, but his gray coat and white shirt and tie were well cut and well made, revealing square shoulders and firm muscles. "Wonder if there's any grub?" said the Duke.

Above the dishes was a cup board and in that cupboard were some of those things each can really enjoy in paper wrappings, sandwiches, cakes, chicken, ham, eggs—all sorts of things.

Thirty minutes later, the Duke had dined comfortably, if not well. Half the contents of the pot of coffee still boiling on the stove comforted him wonderfully, and he carried the dishes. Then he put everything back in place, turned on the lights and, whistling, went into the next room.

At the top of the steps was a kind of library tucked behind, with doors on either side, and at its end, windows facing the sea.

Again he touched a switch, and, this time, lights sprang into being in shaded table lamps, dimly shaded now by winter wrappings. A fire had been laid in the grate. He lit the fire, and a cigar, and then opened a door on his right.

This was a man's room, grates, and toilet. The Duke felt the mattress drawn back over the footboard of the bed, and, sniffing a pungent odor of cedar and camphor, turned his attention to a closet across the room. A very large closet, with an electric light in it, and built-in drawers, and a cedar chest. A top the chest were two pairs of slippers, and above it hung the only garment visible, a blue-striped dressing gown of soft, light flannel. The Duke opened the closet door, and the Duke took the dressing gown and slippers and the blazing fire, and, standing luxuriously before it, changed his clothes. Still neat, he carried the gray suit and the wet undergarments back to the bedroom.

He returned to the fire, stretching himself lazily in a huge, overstuffed chair. Outside, the storm was growing steadily worse. Wind-lunged against the windows, the rain kept up its incessant swish.

In the thick of it he had been an hour before, penniless, overcoatless, trudging along the cement-paved road from Bridgehampton, five miles to the east. On foot, he had left New York that morning just after daybreak. Jobless and flat broke.

For a month—all through April, in fact—the Duke had tramped the streets looking for "a regular job." "What the h—l makes me want to keep straight?" he had asked himself, again and again. "That's all right for guys with an income. If somebody'd started me a rubber-tired pram, and wheeled me into college, and out again into papa's office—sure, I'd run straight. Why not? Who couldn't be a knight in armor? But being a knight without armor—that's different."

Still, he had struck—reasonably, at least—in the face of what seemed almost a conspiracy of discouragement. Fired out of Hollywood for a theft of which he was innocent as an unborn babe. "All right," he had said. "I'll go East, and start all over again." He had nearly frozen in Chicago. He had nearly starved. And then he had hitchhiked to New York, riding freights when he could. A pal and christened him "the Duke," because of his clothes, and his English, and the grand manner he had acquired in Filmland.

New York, with those Hollywood boys wearing him, and that Hollywood gray suit, that had cost $100, being frayed and baggy. Part of a public enemy in a city without jobs. He had eaten his overcoat—the proceeds from it, at any rate—and paid the last dime for a bunk in a flophouse.

A love of books, a sense of humor, and the wanderlust, those he had inherited from an Irish father, whose name was Francis X. Gillett, and whose proud boast was that he came from the University of Dublin. He had died in China nearly six years ago, leaving the fourteen-year-old boy, Barry, to fight his way from Hong Kong to Hollywood and from Chicago to New York. He found himself on the steps of Southampton.

It was late night, and beginning to rain. A cold wind had sprung up from the northwest.

The truth was, chattering by now, and his feet squished in his wet shoes. And this house had seemed so utterly deserted, so entirely safe and secure. "Ten o'clock," said the Duke. "What's the chance of anyone finding me in here tonight? I'll be on my way again at daybreak."

Nice, fed and warm, he was growing drowsy before the fire. "It must be well to live like this all the time," he brooded, dreamily. His head fell forward, and his eyes were closing, when he heard an automobile door slam, and, an instant later, voices and the shuffling of feet on the porch directly beneath him.

The Duke sprang up. The breakfast room window—that was it! But not in dressing gown and slippers. "Damn fool, to take my clothes off!" thought the Duke. Who were these people, anyway, driving up to a closed house at this hour?

Well, what next? Jail, probably. And then he heard the lower door open, and a woman's voice in the hall. "Maybe I can talk my way out," he thought, and started down the stairs. "Who's there?" he called, bravely.

A man answered. "Willets," he said, "Willets, the butler. Is that you, Mr. Ridder?"

And the lights went on. Standing on the landing, the Duke found himself facing a party of four. Willets, with his hat in his hand, squat and powerfully built and ludicrously bald. Another man in a chauffeur's uniform, and two women—one quite young, and the other middle-aged and stout. They seemed propitiatory, and the fact gave him instant courage.

"Is that you, Mr. Ridder?"

The question had been asked first in the dark, but now it was repeated in a glare that made every face plainly visible. The butler didn't know Mr. Ridder, then. That was "a lucky break." It would give him time to dress, and get away. "Yes," he answered, quietly. "You are a little late, aren't you?"

"Sorry, sir," said the butler. "I didn't have any idea you'd be here."

Mr. Evans said you wasn't coming until tomorrow. Evans had to take 'em down to the ship—her and your father, sir. I hope you aren't going to be put out, sir."

"I hope not," the Duke replied, grinning broadly, and, seeing that grin, the four servants smiled, too.

"This is Evans, sir," the butler continued. "This is Mrs. Mulligan, Cook, sir, and Annie Jeffers, the parlor maid. If you don't mind, sir, I'll get them set, and then I'll come upstairs to report."

"Fine!" said the Duke, calculating that five minutes would get him into his clothes, and out the front door.

He was climbing the steps again when Willets called.

"I never thought, sir. Your bed isn't made. I'll get the linen out, and have Annie up there right away. He had scarcely got his trousers when Annie appeared with a small load of immaculate sheets and pillow cases.

"Mr. Evans is lighting the furnace," she said. "The house is that cold. I wonder you didn't think of it. But, of course, you're a stranger here, too."

"A stranger?" What did she mean by that? Where had he been, he wondered? Evidently, not home, at any rate. So that was why Willets hadn't known he wasn't Mr. Ridder. The Duke started half a question.

"Willets isn't a stranger?"

"Of course not," Annie replied. "Nor Mr. Evans. Just Mrs. Mulligan and me. We was taken on when Madam and Mr. Ridder expected to spend the summer here, and we've been let out, I guess, when they decided to go to Germany, if it hadn't been for your coming back."

Returning to the library, trousers still in hand, Barry Gilbert encountered the ubiquitous Willets. "I'll take those, sir," said the butler, taking them.

"Oh, never mind!"

"They'll need pressing."

"I'll need them."

"They'll be ready for you in the morning," Willets said, with a note of finality. "Did you bring any pyjamas, sir?"

"Yes," answered the Duke, "but like an idiot, I checked my suitcase, and God knows what happened to the check!"

"I'll get you a pair of your father's," Willets volunteered. "You are very much of a size."

The Duke didn't mind. It was all "a lucky break," only—how long would it last? "Mustn't over-play my luck," thought the Duke. But the real Mr. Ridder "wasn't coming until tomorrow." Why make a break for it tonight?

The butler returned with a pair of purple silk pyjamas. "Anything else, sir?"

"No, thanks."

"I'll be leaving you then. What time breakfast, sir?"

"Oh, say eight o'clock."

"Right, sir. Good night, sir," said the butler, bowing himself out.

"Easy!" thought the Duke, standing before the fire, with the pyjamas in his hand. "Too damned easy! There's a catch in it somewhere!"

Willets implied that he had been with the family some time. Why had he never seen the son? Or even a picture of him? Why did he take those trousers? "I'm trapped," mused the Duke.

"Or else he's no more a butler than I am Mr. Ridder. There's a lot of mighty valuable junk in this house."

It was with that thought in his mind that His Grace of Hollywood finally turned the other cheek on an Irish linen pillow slip, and dropped off to sleep.

A CITIZEN VIEWS

THE CARNIVAL

The winter carnival held under the auspices of the Gould Academy, Y. M. C. A. was a picturesque, praiseworthy event. The day perfect and the snow setting in. The ski jumping in the morning at the Anderson farm on the outskirts of Skillington was well worth braving the zero weather to witness. Through the courtesy of Mr. Anderson, augmented by hard work on the part of Mr. Crane and Y. M. C. A. boys, a fine ski jump has been made. Several trees that interfered with safety and view have been removed and now no better jump is available. It would be difficult to find a lovelier scene than the evergreen trees, sparkling whiteness of the hills dotted with the gay costumes of spectators and the commendable performance of the contestants.

The events of the afternoon at the athletic field were well attended, briskly contested and near professional in their speed and technique. Both boys and girls made splendid entries in the ski and snowshoe dashes, three-legged races, downhill sprints and slalom races. Gould Academy has an enviable local reputation.

The Carnival Ball was a successful and popular event in the William Bingham Gymnasium. Decorations were in red and white and gave a holiday air to the dance floor. Lord's Orchestra furnished delightful music. The order of dances included old fashioned dances and a barn dance special. The Girls' Glee Club sang with accordion accompaniment and the boys gave a pleasing rendition of college harmonies. The ballroom dancing was unusually perfect and decorous with no exception. Cabaret tables were popular and Y. M. C. A. boys served refreshments.

This annual carnival does need to be better, but as pride and appreciative citizens we can help the sponsors make it a bigger event.

GOULD WALLOPS GORHAM 40-21

With Daniels setting the pace, Gould Academy walloped their new Hampshire rivals 40 to 21. Bob Browne and Eddy Robertson also played stellar basketball. Wentzel, star of the first Gorham game, was kept pretty well bottled up most of the game but came through in the last period for two baskets. For Gorham Dunton was the big gun with 13 points to his credit. Walker, their star man was well guarded by Daniels, who kept him from scoring a single point while the Gould center was gathering 13 points.

GOULD LOSES SENSATIONAL GAME 32-31

Another typical Gould-Norway game had spectators in a frenzy until the final whistle blew with the visitors out in front 32-31. Gould got away to a nice lead in the first period due to some excellent work by Browne and Wentzell. During the last half, however, the local lads threw the ball away just as often as they started for the basket. It was the poorest passing exhibition for some time. Verenis did yeomanlike work for Norway in intercepting pass after pass made by Gould players. Wight, right forward for the visitors, was the offensive star of the game, making 15 of his team's 32 points.

Gould Seconds 22—Norway 10
The Gould second team with McFarland and Stiles leading the scoring gained revenge on the Norway seconds for an earlier defeat. The victors took an early lead and were never in trouble as the score at the end of the third period was 18-3.

Only three field goals were registered by the visitors and two of these were by F. Bartlett, the center. Considerable credit for this scarcity of baskets goes to D. Thurston who played good defensive game under the opponents basket.
